There are at present sixty-two classes in the grammar and primary grades. For the use of these classes there are about one hundred and fifty sets of readers, or an average of about two and one-half sets to a class. These sets vary from those containing one book for each pupil to those containing twenty or less to a set. There are about three thousand pupils, and the entire number of readers in the city is five thousand four hundred and thirteen (5,413) or about one and eighth-tenths per pupil. Perhaps it will be plainer to arrange by grades. Grade IV.--Each pupil has a copy of Monroe s Third Reader. Besides...
