In the United States, New York city, as the metropolis of the country and its most complex community, has naturally taken a conspicuous part in this work. Since well-organized efforts were begun here, seven years ago, a cut of over thirty percent, has been made in the infant death rate - a striking demonstration of what can be done by a systematic campaign, waged winter and summer, for clean, safe milk and educated motherhood! Today this city can show an infant death rate lower than that of any of the ten largest cities of the country. In this field New York has not only taught many lessons to other communities, but has in turn received many valuable suggestions from the experience of other cities which the...
